Sir,

16 June 1839.

I BEG leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, referring to your communication of the 6th, and enclosing a copy of an Order of the House of Commons, bearing date the 15th of May.

In reference to the part of said Order that cannot be furnished by the Board of Works, I have now to state that I have not any Return to make, as there has not been any additional building, or any greater number of patients accommodated than what we were able to contain at the first opening.

In consequence of having only the County and City of Waterford attached as a district, the Asylum has seldom been full.

Alexander Macdonnell, Esq.

* The Asylum opened on the 14th July 1825, and the admissions from that period to the 1st January 1826 were 57.

† The Asylum has latterly been greatly pressed for admissions, chiefly owing to the great number of persons sent through the different county gaols as criminal lunatics.

The clothing and food for servants is included under those heads respectively, and being more expensive than that of the patients, it considerably increases the cost per head of those items, which is calculated from the average number of patients only.

* The large outlay in general repairs, alterations, &c., and providing accommodation, bedding, &c. for 60 patients additional, has much increased the total expenditure, and, consequently, raised the cost per head about 4 l. 10 s. for the year ending 31 March 1838.

When the Asylum was first opened for the reception of patients, there were 70 transmitted to it from the house of industry in Waterford, who had been inmates of that institution from three to twenty-one years, which will account for the small number of patients discharged cured, in comparison with the number admitted; and also that from having but the small County of Waterford and the City attached to the Asylum, we can afford to receive a greater number of incurables in proportion than the other Asylums.
