

PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS (IRELAND)

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 29 June 1848 ;—for,

A COPY “of Mr. Mathews’ REPORT to the Irish Government, and forming part of the Documents required by the Order of the 6th day of July 1847, on the Application of PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS in Ireland, for Suspension of the Rules under which the Congregations have to pay certain Sums before their Ministers can receive the Parliamentary Grant.”

R E P O R T.

IN reference to Dr. Morgan’s application of 12th February last, transmitted to me by the Chief Secretary for report, I beg to state, that some weeks thereafter I forwarded to the several Presbyteries printed forms, to be filled up with the customary statistical accounts of their various congregations for the year ending 31st March 1847. Such forms are annually issued in March; and to follow the same course again appeared the best way of collecting the facts necessary for a decision on the matter. Very shortly afterwards, many Presbyterian Ministers in Ulster intimated to me that their congregations had not paid them the requisite £. 35 of stipend, relying on some newspaper announcement to the effect, that from the distress in Ireland Her Majesty’s Government were this year to authorize the issue of the Royal Bounty without any regard to any particular payments by the people to their Ministers. I lost no time in undeceiving them on this point, stating also, that unless the stipulated amount was paid up as usual, Bounty would not be issued to the Ministers of the defaulting congregations. This, of course, led to much explanatory inquiry and correspondence, eventually ending, however, in the stipend being paid by all the congregations bound to do so, except in two cases, which are still under consideration. And the aggregate amount of stipend for the year ending 31st March last, is not now less than for former years, when no failure of crops could be complained of. Under these circumstances it is submitted, that the request should not be complied with.

But as the extract from Dr. Morgan’s letter of 28th April indicates the possibility of this application being submitted to Government, with reference to the year ending 31st March 1848 (notwithstanding every appearance of an abundant harvest), it becomes my duty to go more into detail, in so far merely as the subject involves a grant of public money.

A Return is annexed (the first of the kind), showing the population and payments of every congregation belonging to the General Assembly, being the body on whose behalf Dr. Morgan applied. In this there are 451 congregations accounted for, paying altogether £. 18,441 of stipend, or about £. 40 a year each. The number of families is stated to be 86,450, and multiplying them by five (which is about the truth), the total number of persons will be 432,250. And if the aggregate stipend be divided by them, the average payment by each individual to his Minister is 41 farthings a year. The population connected with the General Assembly has been frequently affirmed by parties representing it, to be five, six, and even eight hundred thousand. The materials for the present census have, however, been furnished to me by the several Presbyteries; and should they have inadvertently made an under-statement, any increase of numbers must proportionably diminish even the very low average rate of payment given above. No doubt there are many poor in so large a denomination; but, as is known to every one acquainted with Ulster, there are also great numbers of prosperous, wealthy families. It is, however, unquestionable, that for about the last 40 years no class of Christians have been in the habit of paying so little to their Ministers as the laity of the several Presbyterian Synods, endowed by Parliamentary grant; and did the same parties reside in Scotland, England, or any where, except in Ireland, they would have to contribute a far larger amount. The cause of this is easily shown.

From 1690, when the Royal Bounty commenced, down to the year 1803, the grant was annually divided share and share alike among all the Ministers of each Synod; and as it was only at intervals of many years that the Irish Parliament made any additions to it, each newly-formed congregation brought a new Minister on the grant, and thereby reduced the share previously received by the other Ministers. These Ministers assembled in Presbytery, are the parties who ecclesiastically organize a new congregation; and previous to 1803 they would form none, unless there was a sufficient body of people undertaking to pay the new Minister an amount of stipend considerably more than £. 35. But in 1803 the grant was largely increased, and divided into three classes—certain congregations being placed in the first class, entitling their Ministers to £. 100 a year of Bounty; others, in the second class, entitling them to £. 75; and the Ministers of the third class receiving £. 50 a year. Newly-formed congregations were to be further provided for by additions to the grant, without diminishing the shares of the existing Ministers. Under the operation of the system up to 1803, the congregations had been trained to pay their Ministers liberally; and a change to the worse in this respect never being apprehended, no stipulation was in the arrangements of 1803 made by Government, requiring the payment of stipend as a condition of obtaining Bounty. But that arrangement began in a few years to operate most prejudicially; congregations were from time to time formed without regard to their payment of stipend, for Bounty could be got without it, or without lessening the share of the other Ministers. What used formerly to be the smaller part of the Minister's income, became in this way its chief part; and an opinion gradually gained ground throughout the congregations, that it was not to them, but to the Government, that the Ministers were to look for support. That this opinion has been extensively acted on is too obvious, from the accompanying Return; and it is to be borne in mind, that Presbyterians pay their Ministers no dues on the occasions of Baptisms, Marriages, Deaths, or for the administration of any religious rites. The stipend constitutes the sole payment; and it is given, as rent, for accommodation in the Meeting-house.

The three-fold classification of 1803 was very unsatisfactory to the great bulk of the Ministers, of whom the second and third classes were composed. Deputations from year to year waited upon Government, praying for an equalization of the grant, and the abolition of a class-division, which was represented as destructive of the ecclesiastical parity of Ministers recognized by the Presbyterian Church. When this subject came at length to be looked into, it appeared that the equalization sought for was, that the Ministers should all receive £. 100 a year of Bounty. The Government declined that proposition, but offered to raise at once the £. 50 class to £. 75, on condition that the £. 100 class should come down to £. 75 as vacancies took place among them—thereby giving in time £. 75 to all; and this was agreed to in 1838. It was at the same time announced, that regulations respecting the payment of stipend were under consideration; and a circular was issued to the several Synods on the 20th October in that year, intimating, that the future issue of new endowments would be dependent on the payment of a certain stipend by each congregation, the amount of which would be specified in a subsequent communication. Such a measure had become absolutely necessary on the part of Government, viewed even on financial grounds; for although no Presbytery in Scotland or England would ordain a Minister in any congregation without adequate stipend being secured to him, yet some Presbyteries in Ulster felt under no such restraint, as the Bounty had become the mainstay; and, in not a few cases, ordinations took place, while the whole yearly stipend to the Minister would not equal the wages of a day labourer. So injurious was this system upon the people themselves, that during the three-fold classification of Bounty it sometimes occurred, that a congregation, on finding that its Minister had got himself advanced from the third to the second class, or from the latter to the first, thereupon diminished their previous payment of stipend; and by keeping down his income to the former amount, saved their own contributions, at the expense of the Treasury. To check this and similar tendencies, the Government promulgated in 1840 certain regulations regarding Royal Bounty; one of which was, that, at the very least, £. 35 of stipend must be yearly paid to the Minister, otherwise no Bounty could be issued. Great reluctance was manifested to this regulation, regulation, or to the payment of any prescribed amount of stipend being made an absolute condition of participating in the Parliamentary grant; but as the congregations gave no undertaking or legal deed, securing, as in Scotland and elsewhere, the payment of a specific income to their Ministers; and as past experience demonstrated, that unless the Government interfered, the existing system would continue, the regulation in question would not be departed from. Every Minister therefore now receives (exclusive of the Royal Bounty) a minimum congregational income of £. 35, of which £. 20 must be paid by his congregation, while the balance may be made up by a free manse, or a permanent bequest, or a donation.

The Ministers endowed since 20th October 1838, are those only whose congregations are subject to this regulation; for the Ministers endowed previously, and who comprise a great part of the Return, were secured in the continuance of their Bounty, irrespective of stipend. As vacancies, however, occur among them, their congregations fall under the rule. Since the regulations have been in force, all congregations bound to make up the £. 35, are certified by their Presbyteries to do so; but it is apparent, from a glance at the Return, that they seldom exceed the prescribed amount. On the other hand, congregations formerly paying old Ministers beyond £. 35, now pay the new Ministers exactly £. 35; and it is feared, only pay even that sum, just because the Government regulations make it necessary. Wherever the Bounty cannot be got without payment of a particular stipend, the requisite sum is paid, but no more; such, with occasional exceptions, is becoming the practice. Three old rural congregations, which, from change of Ministers, fell under the regulations during the past year, and who paid the former Ministers not more stipend than from £. 10 to £. 15, at once made up the £. 35 to secure the Bounty, notwithstanding the prevalent distress; and it is notorious, that many congregations could well pay far more stipend than they do at present. The Consul Act, which empowers the Treasury to give yearly allowances to Episcopalian or Presbyterian Ministers of British congregations on the Continent, requires the congregation to pay a sum equal to the allowance. But in Ireland, the congregation has only to pay half its amount; nor is there any annual vote of Parliament granted upon so small a contribution by the parties locally benefited by the issue.

There are three small Presbyterian Bodies in Ulster who accept no Royal Bounty; and their congregations, which are suffering under the same difficulties as their neighbours, pay more than double the average stipend of the endowed congregations. One of these Bodies, called the Eastern Reformed Synod, has indeed largely increased its stipend this year. Other Protestant Dissenters (not of the Presbyterian denomination), in despite of all local pressure, likewise pay towards their own religious interests, a much greater average sum, than the Presbyterians of the Synods receiving Parliamentary support.

Allusions are made in Dr. Morgan's letter to an increase of the Bounty, from the inadequacy of £. 75 to maintain the Ministers during the present high price of provisions. To many similar communications from other quarters I have pointed out, as an answer, the payments of the congregations to their Ministers, when contrasted with all around them; for while, in the commonest hedge or infant school, the children give each a penny a week, the Presbyterian Ministers, for affording religious instruction, do not receive from their people at the rate of even one farthing a week. Other denominations are taxed for a Parliamentary grant, to enable the Presbyterian laity to support their Ministers; and, by additional taxation, still further to relieve that laity who contribute so little to this object themselves, would be unjust to those other denominations, who have entirely to pay their own Ministers, and do it liberally, and cheerfully.

All which I now report,

Dublin Castle, 28 June 1847.

(signed) George Mathews.
